

Call for Artists!

Are you an artist who wants to share your story of survival? The National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV) is partnering with Thirty-One Gifts to raise awareness about domestic violence this fall and we would like to feature YOU in the “Actually, I Can” campaign.

WHO: Artists who identify as survivors of domestic violence

WHAT: Create an original piece of artwork that incorporates the phrase “Actually, I Can”

- Any medium is fine, but the winning piece will be printed, so consider choosing a medium that photographs or transfers to digital well.
- The “Actually, I Can” campaign logo is below for inspiration

WHEN & WHERE: Submit a high resolution digital copy of your piece by June 26, 2019 to thirtyone@nnedv.org along with your contact information (name, address, email, and contact phone number)

WHY: To raise awareness about domestic violence and the various ways that survivors embody resilience and strength in the face of adversity

The winning design will be:

- Printed on a Canvas Collection item – signed by YOU – that will be auctioned off at the Thirty-One’s National Conference in July. (Proceeds will be donated to the Independence Project at NNEDV, a program established with seed funding from Thirty-One, which helps survivors build their credit through micro-lending)
- Shared digitally with the network of Thirty-One Gifts consultants and shared widely via social media.

(OPTIONAL) The winning artist will be:

- Invited to join the Thirty-One Gifts National Conference held in Columbus, Ohio in July (travel and hotel expenses will be paid by Thirty-One Gifts) (learn more at www.thirtyoneconference.com)
- Invited to talk about your winning design during Conference
