Despite their tireless efforts, domestic violence programs simply do not have enough resources. More funding is required at the federal, tribal, state, territorial, and local levels. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

When domestic violence survivors can't access services, they often have no choice but to remain with abusers and risk further violence against themselves and their children. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Congress must improve system-wide responses, eliminate barriers, and ensure that no domestic violence program is ever forced to turn away survivors when faced with a decrease in funding. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Domestic violence programs need increased funding to provide shelter, housing, safety planning, and other services to survivors, while also working toward preventing violence in their communities. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

When domestic violence survivors make the choice to reach out for help, it is crucial that programs and advocates have sufficient funding, staffing, and resources to meet their needs. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Domestic violence programs need resources to provide and expand services that support marginalized survivors and to hire advocates with lived experiences. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Domestic violence programs are lifelines for survivors, and no program should ever have to turn away someone in need. However, many programs struggle to maintain stable funding. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

A reduction in Victims of Crime Act (#VOCA) funds is forcing domestic violence programs to lay off staff, reduce services, and serve fewer survivors. Congress must prevent these catastrophic cuts. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

A stark lack of affordable housing across the country means that advocates often can't help domestic violence survivors find a safe place to live. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Limited and unpredictable budgets often mean that domestic violence programs can't provide staff with competitive wages and benefits, leading to high turnover and burnout. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Many abusers choose to manipulate the legal system to further harm victims. Local programs need funding to provide legal advocacy and representation so survivors can pursue the justice they deserve. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Having access to safe, affordable transportation can help domestic violence survivors access services, hold down a job, and meet their basic needs. Programs need funds to provide transportation. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Having safe, dependable childcare is a necessity for domestic violence survivors working to support their families after escaping abuse. Local programs urgently need funding to provide these services. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Counseling and therapy can equip domestic violence survivors with essential tools and coping strategies to overcome trauma. However, funding cuts force many programs to eliminate these positions. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

With budget constraints, services for marginalized domestic violence survivors are often reduced or eliminated, putting them at a disadvantage and forcing them to navigate complicated systems alone. Learn more in @nnedv's 18th Annual #DVCounts Report: NNEDV.org/DVCounts

Anti-immigration policies make it harder for domestic violence survivors to seek safety. When programs don't have funding to support these survivors, they often remain trapped, afraid, and in danger.
